

CITATION

Founded in June 2008, the U.S. Positive Women's Network (PWN) is a national membership body consisted of HIV-positive women and allies working for U.S. policy that upholds human rights for all people living with and susceptible to the HIV infection.

Throughout the nation, PWN Chapters have formed and stand committed to the ultimate mission of relieving suffering and saving lives through education, advocacy, and compassionate outreach. In an effort to raise awareness and influence change, PWN affiliates have incorporated an integral strategy related to promoting events focused on bringing together committed organizations and individuals for the purpose of through education and information about the devastating effects of AIDS.

On March 5, 2011, PWN-Philly is hosting National Women and Girls HIV Awareness Day, aimed at implementing the President's National HIV/AIDS Strategy (NHAS) to reduce HIV infections in America. In collaboration with the Women's Health Division and the Community Education Group, this event will specifically examine women's vulnerabilities and the risks for HIV. Women will have the opportunity to offer solutions and address HIV prevention options that could effectively impact the quality of lives.

This year, Ms. Jane Shull, Executive Director of Philadelphia FIGHT, a comprehensive AIDS service organization, is the keynote speaker and will present further research and insights related to serious issues of HIV/AIDS.

It is fitting and appropriate, that I, Michael A. Nutter, Mayor of the City of Philadelphia officially recognize with this Citation and encourage Philadelphians to support all efforts related to improving the quality of life.
